In Fiscal Year 2016, the Bureau of Population, Refugees, and Migration (PRM) contributed $3.4 billion to humanitarian efforts globally, the majority of which went to overseas humanitarian assistance and refugee resettlement.

Resettlement
- PRM spent nearly $395 million to provide new beginnings to the world’s most vulnerable refugees.

Assistance
- More than $2.8 billion of PRM funding was devoted to humanitarian assistance overseas.

The United States has welcomed more than 3.2 million refugees for resettlement since 1975. That’s more than twice the population of Pittsburgh!

Shelter and Education
- Our funding supports education programs to help refugee children who have lost their birthright order to school and help provide much-needed educational opportunities for those who need them.

Food & Water
- Thanks to U.S. assistance, millions of refugees and internally displaced people have received clean water and food assistance.

Protection
- The United States is a leader in protecting the rights of refugees and displaced people overseas, and in seeking to protect refugees from physical harm.

Did you know?
- The United States is the world’s single largest donor to UNHCR, UNICEF, ICRC, and IOM.

Where does our assistance go?
- These five organizations received the majority of PRM’s overseas humanitarian assistance, providing life-saving care and services for vulnerable people around the world.

Where did we provide support?
- Funding for overseas humanitarian assistance covered six geographical regions across the globe, nearly 80% of all assistance was focused in three areas.

- Near East: More than $1.3 billion
- Africa: More than $716 million
- South Asia: More than $124 million

- The map includes assistance to refugees and internally displaced people in some of the world’s most challenging environments.
- This includes assistance to refugees and internally displaced people in the Horn of Africa, which has been one of the most difficult environments.
- Assistance to refugees and internally displaced people in other regions such as Afghanistan.
